Unwholesome Measures. To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

Senator Lambert is again asking the Leg-anything in the consideration of the advisability of creating and locating state institutions? If there is pressing need for such Weese, Misses Nellie Gunder, Margaret an institution as the senator's bill calls Boyd and Lulu C. Baltz. for the bill providing for it should leave its location to be determined by a proper commission appointed by the Governor, which could consider the subject in all its

some particular point as the result of the special efforts of some senator or representative and the end of the mischief done by such a beginning would not be reached in years. Under such a system the increase of state institutions would be marvelous and the burden of taxation correspond-ingly expanded. Why, the whole State would go in for an institution and an ap-

It has already been found to be a "de-parture from wise principles" to scatter our benevolent and reformatory institutions over the State under the management of separate boards, far removed from the watchful eye of the chief executive of the State, and has brought lobbying and logrolling in our Legislature to a very high

Representative Muller, of Vanderburg county, has introduced a bill to locate a "deaf and dumb institute" at Evansville, thus showing that the practice of trying to get something out of the state treasury for one's home county bids fair to be popular with legislators. It is greatly to be hoped that the good sense of the Legislature will prevail against these unwholesome measures and an example set for all time to come in opposition to this J. H. CLAYPOOL. Emily Marshall Escaped Danger by Walking Over an Admirer's Body. Writing of "The Loveliest Women in all America," William Perrine, in the November Ladies' Home Journal, recalls the thrilling adventure of Emily Marshall, the famous Boston beauty, at Niagara Falls. She, with Nathaniel P. Willis and a young, ungainly college student, Job Smith, attempted to go under the falls, in those days a perilous undertaking. After they had Marshall off from her companions by an abyss six feet in width, and leaving her but a small stone in the swirling torrents to stand upon. "In the commotion Job had been forgotten, but instantly a ray of hope shot into Willis's heart when he saw hi rugged features, his sandy hair plastered over his forehead, his scanty dress clinging to his form like a skin, and his hand trembling on the poet's shoulder as he steadled his steps. Without saying what he intended to do he crept down carefully to the edge of the foaming abyss till he stood up to his knees in the breaking bubbles. It seemed impossible that he could reach the lovely creature or that she could jump forward safely from the slippery rock into his arms. Willis covered his eyes in fear and wonder. The next moment when he opened them there lay at his feet the quivering and exhausted girl. Job was nearly seven feet high. He had flung himself over and with certain death if he missed his hold, Miss Marshall had quickly walked over his body in its bridge-like posture. At this moment the guide returned with a rope, fastened it around one of Job's feet and dragged him back through the whirlpool. When he recovered from his immersion he fell on his knees in a prayer of Sonnet. Take not thy place behind me, as with slow And slower steps, a waning shape, I go Toward the silent valley and the end. Lest midway down I turn with rage and send A curse at Thee; nay, seize Thy blade and mow Myself down at Thy feet, and with the snow those deep years let my heart's summer blend. Oh, Miguty One! How were it meet for Thee To set Thy foot upon the vanquished head, To wrest from Age a stingless victory Whence Joy and Song and Love long, long have
